Dear Ones,

It is the wee hours of the morning here in Slovenia, so I thought I would take advantage of my jet lag and send a short update...

Thank you for your prayers for our safe return--we departed Seattle Sunday and arrived in Murska Sobota Tuesday afternoon, following an overnight in Vienna. On the eve of our departure, Mel's back issue flared up --we once again experienced God's kindness via the help of family, a local chiropractor and airline personnel in Seattle, Amsterdam and Vienna. Mel is feeling somewhat better--please pray with us for his complete healing.

The renovation in our apartment building is still ongoing. In fact, the work in our place was completed the day before we arrived. We are very thankful that we could get in to our apartment and for friends who cleaned and put back some of our furniture before we came.

Finally, on Tuesday we learned that my dad had been rushed to the hospital with severe nausea and a cardiac arrhythmia. Tests revealed gall stones. Pray for wisdom for my parents and the doctors--the gall bladder most likely needs to be removed, but the weakened condition of dad's heart makes this somewhat risky.

Thank you for praying with us and for us!

In the hollow of His hand,

Patty, for Mel and our family
